- Miss M. Lillian Crea - 1919, 1920, 1923.

3. The following is a digest of several news items in the Herald-Review files: Hugh Crea was born in 1835 in Gananoqui, Canada, in the heart of the Thousand Island district. He came to Decatur in 1863, just after being admitted to law practice. He practiced alone in Decatur until 1872, when he joined C. A. Ewing to form the firm of Crea & Ewing. Mr. Ewing died in 1896. The firm became Housum & Crea in 1913.

Present owner's name: Harold & Mildred Eyer 465 S. Edward - 429-6153.
Office, 250 N. Water - 428-2188.

3, Continued.

In 1867 James Millikin and Jerome R. Gorin doing business as J. Millikin and Co., bankers, retained Hugh Crea as counsel. He was also a railroad and power company attorney.

Orlando Powers was Hugh Crea's first and lasting good friend in Decatur.

Though prominent in politics (a Republican), he never held office.

In a 50-year-as-attorney news article in 1913, reporting on a meeting of Decatur attorneys to honor him, he was described as "the greatest lawyer in this district, if not in Illinois".....He died January 31, 1918.

4. "Among other distinguished lawyers, who practiced in Decatur, were C. C. McComas, state's attorney; Hugh Crea, known particularly for his attention to railroad law....."

From the Centennial History of Macon County, p. 109,

By Mabel Richmond, 1930

5. Mr. Crea had two children, Miss Mary Lillian Crea, a teacher of foreign languages in the Decatur High School for many years, a wide traveller and an active member of the Decatur Art Class, begun by Mrs. James Millikin, and one son, Harry Hugh Crea, wife, Jeannette.

6. The Assessor's office estimates (and they stress estimates) that the house was built in 1880. The description of the house as given on the card for 334 W. Macon in the Assessor's office is as follows:

Pay Fine Tribute to Memory of Hugh Crea

Attorneys from Macon and Adjoining Counties Gather for Memorial Service in Circuit Court Room and Recall a Wonderful Personality.

Members of the Decatur bar and others from adjoining counties gathered in the circuit court room Monday afternoon and paid tribute to the memory of the man all present had recognized not only as the greatest lawyer of Macon county or the sixth judicial district, but as one of the greatest lawyers of the central West in his time—Hugh Crea.

Atty. Hugh Housum, who for 15 years had been closely associated with Mr. Crea, read a biographical sketch with some reference to his personal characteristics as a lawyer and in closing made a motion that the resolutions adopted by the bar and a stenographic report of this meeting be spread upon the records of the circuit court and the supreme court, and that motion was approved. Judge W. K. Whitfield presided and following the paper by Atty. Housum, John R. Fitzgerald was called upon and read a splendid tribute to the worth of Atty. Hugh Crea, in closing which he said:

A Good Companion.

More important than these was his delightful but unique personality. His strong common sense combined with tact, urbanity of temper, and a rich wit and humor which made him a good companion and preserved friendships even in the midst of heated lawsuits. No lawyer could dishearten Hugh Crea. When asked for a favor or a professional courtesy, such was the characteristic of his temperament, and disposition that he granted it in a manner as if he were the one obliged. If unable to grant a request, which was rare, he explained truthfully and frankly why he could not. He was uniformly respectful to the courts, and fully conscious of the rights of others. As we pay these last tributes of honor and respect to his memory, let us emulate and imitate these, his splendid qualities. For the deceased, the morning and noonday sun is passed and is set—the shadows are cast in the Western sky.

"No higher encomium could be paid to any lawyer than to say: 'He was honest, he was able, he was courteous, he was fair.' These things we can truthfully say of the illustrious dead. Throughout our professional life we shall ever revere his name and respect his memory."

Met Equal.

Mr. Fitzgerald referred to the fact that during the many years of his active practice Mr. Crea had met as equal such men as Robert G. Ingersoll then of Teoria; Daniel W. Voorhees of Indiana; Anthony Thornton of Shelbyville; Horace Clark of Macon; John R. Eden of Sullivan; and Richard Lemon of Canton, and commented upon the fact that Mr. Crea had nullified all of those celebrated contemporaries.

A FINE PERSONALITY

Judge Davidson Writes His Impressions.

(Fourteenth in series of articles on early members of the Decatur bar.)

Thirty or forty years ago one of the leading law firms in Decatur was Crea & Ewing—Hugh Crea and Charles A. Ewing. The partnership continued till the death of Mr. Ewing in 1898. Mr. Crea continued the practice for many years after the death of his partner. Never were two partners of more widely different personalities. They were not in agreement in politics or religion, but neither was a bone of contention in their association as lawyers. They were both scholarly, polished, courtly gentlemen and able lawyers. I. D.
Walker, who had previously practiced law in Decatur for a number of years, was taken into the firm, but he died soon after.

DAVIDSON'S ARTICLE.

Judge Davidson writes chiefly of Hugh Crea in this chapter of his memoirs:

HUGH CREAs.

Many living persons know something of the character of the person of this sketch. I have no data of his age or place of his birth, but an under the impression he was a Canadian, but of this I may be wrong. I can well remember him when he began the practice of law in Decatur.
Like most all young lawyers he had to accept cases that had little pay in them in order to demonstrate his ability to take care of a client, so to see him wending his way to some justice shop to try a case was a usual sight.

He had a fine personality. Tall, straight as an arrow, wore a long red beard, nose slightly Roman, and with a steel gray, piercing eye, he was a man whom the passers-by would turn to look at after he had passed. After being in law for a time, he associated with himself Charles A. Ewing and the firm name was Crea and Ewing.

IN IMPORTANT CASES.

This firm enjoyed a large and extended practice, and was engaged in some of the most important cases ever tried by a court or jury in Macon county. Mr. Crea appeared for the city in the celebrated Fisher vs.
Decatur case spoken of in other articles of this series of recollections of the early bar. He assisted M. B.
Thompson in the trial of Forest and Walton, charged with the murder of the man at the door of the Garver church, which case was defended by Brower Bunn and Hon. John R. Eden.
He appeared for the defendant in the Gordon case in which Mrs. Ethel Gordon sought to have a separate maintenance from her spouse. He defended Clayborn Jones in the celebrated Buffalo-Bull case brought by Eli Ulery.

GOT WITNESS IN TANGLE.

The Fisher-Decatur case was one long to be remembered because of the character of the evidence and witnesses in the case. It seems to me the trial the writer heard was the second jury trial of the case. Miss Fisher was a young lady who fell and injured herself because of a defective sidewalk in Decatur. Mr. Bunn, bound to win his case, spared neither time nor expense in preparing his case for trial. He had a noted surgeon of St. Louis make an examination of Miss Fisher to determine the extent of her injury. It was claimed that the accident had caused Prolapsus Uteri. The St. Louis doctor assumed a very important air, as he gave in his direct testimony, and was finally passed over to Attorney Crea for cross-examination. People who heard this cross-examination will never forget, perhaps, the tangle that Mr. Crea got him into. He sweat great drops that ran off his chin, as Mr. Crea charged on his medical knowledge and skill as an expert witness.

KNOWN OVER STATE.

As long as he lived he was a busy lawyer, and had cases all over the state. He was personally known to all the lawyers in the Sixth Judicial circuit of Illinois, in which he lived and practiced most. In politics he was a Republican, but I don't think he ever asked his party to elect him to an office. He died a few years ago, and the bar held a memorial service in his honor. Most all the present members of the Macon county bar were acquainted with him, and know of his activities in practice in later years. He was a man loved by his friends and feared by his adversaries in a legal contest.
